

EXPERIENCING AND REMAGINING THE UNIVERSITY CAMPUS: CRITICAL, CREATIVE AND EQUITABLE PLACES OF HIGHER EDUCATION Symposium

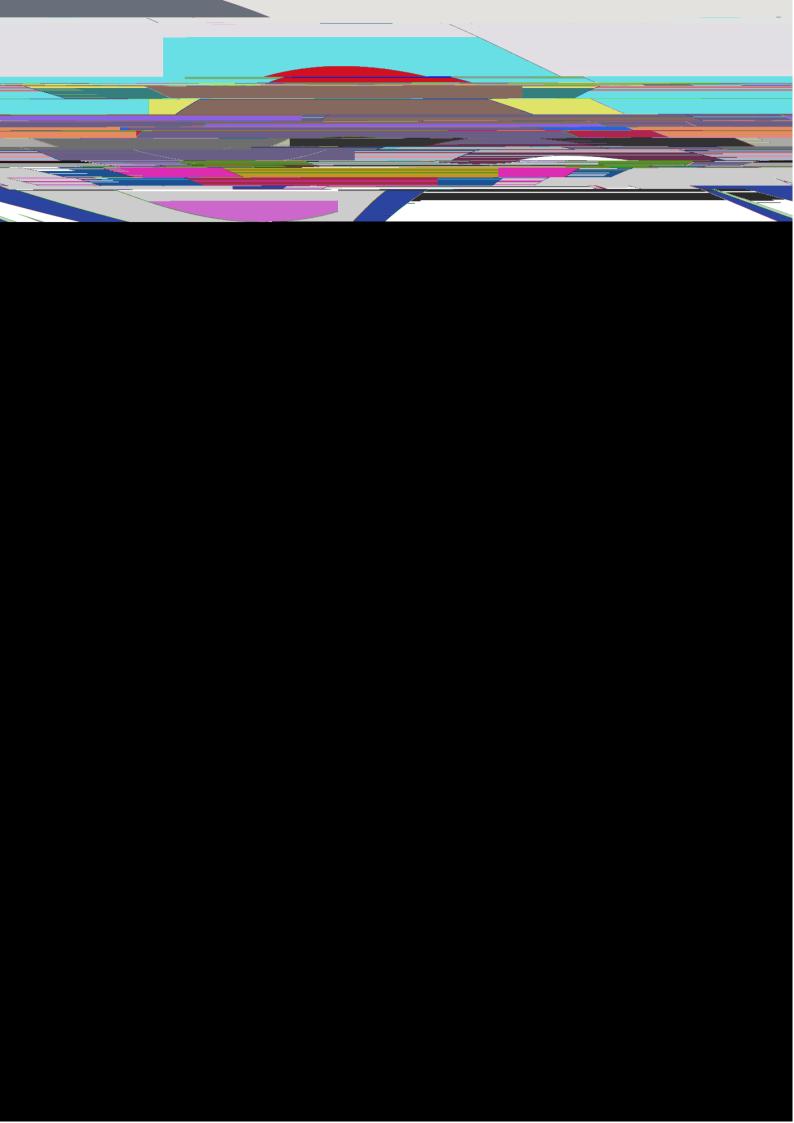

30th April 2024 9:30 a.m. 4:30 p.m. Eastern Gateway Building 003/ A Brunel University London

This international one-day symposium examines the role the university campus plays in higher education and the local community. The university campus has become a focus of research interest in the UK and beyond. Changes in higher education, the student body and student experience, the increased digitalization of society along with the challenges of post-COVID engagement have begun to prompt a reimagining of both the physical form of the campus and its civic role across the UK and the world.

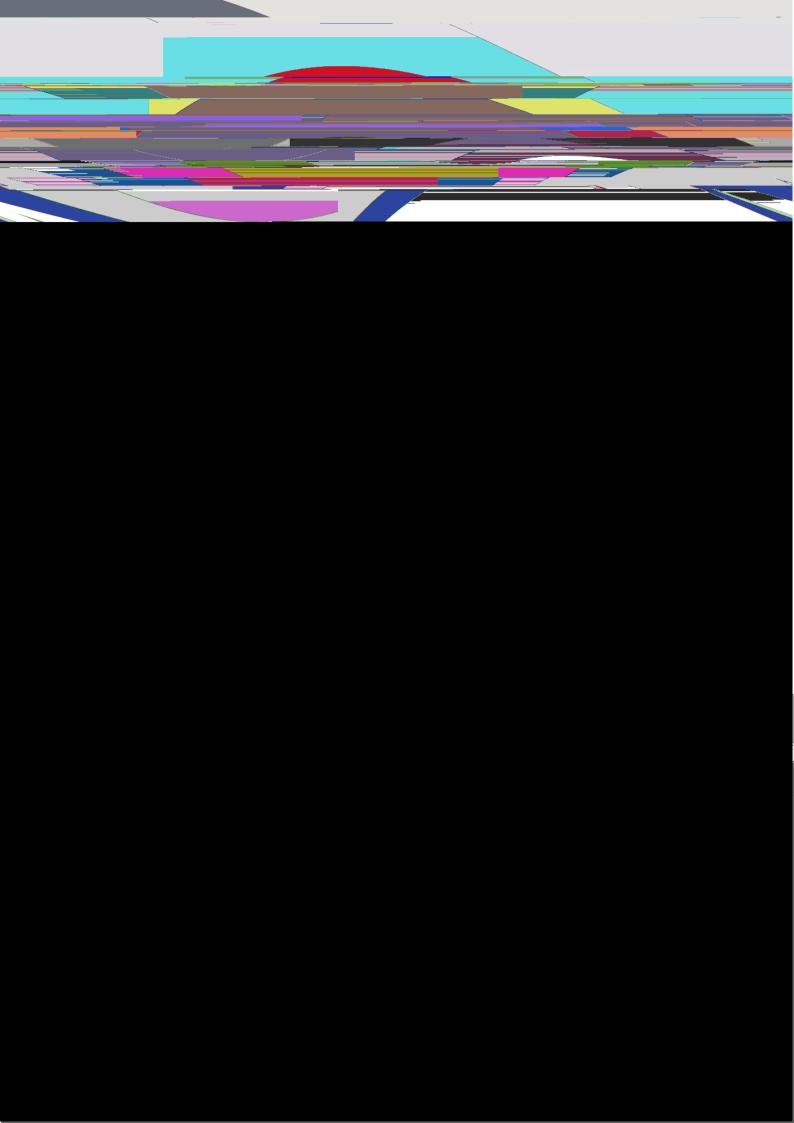

The symposium, organised by the Brunel University's Human Geography: Space, Place and Society Research Group, focuses on three themes:

- 1. The relationship between the campus and the local community
 - 2. Supporting belonging: campus and sense of place
 - 3. The changing role of campus in a transforming society

In particular, the symposium aims to expand intellectual curiosity and share research and suggestions around the role of university campuses as sites for critical, creative, and equitable higher education and civic institutions.

12:05 12:25 p.m. Chris Morris (King's College London)

the pushback from V	Vestern institutio	ons to carry on a	s normal with only	a few tweaks post

